THE DEPORTATIONS. GOVERNMENT DEFENCE.

[Reuter's Service To The "Telegraph"]

London, Received February 6.
Reuter's Capetown correspondent says the Hon. Mr. Smuts, Minister of Defence, concluded his speech after speaking for two and a half hours. He contended that the urgency, gravity and exceptional character of the crisis, and the success of the measures taken under martial law justified its proclamation, while he justifiably deplored the grounds of expediency and public policy. He quoted from speeches of the deposed Labourite leaders to show that they aimed at revolution and civil war. The ordinary law, he said, never contemplated such a situation which was one of civil war.

Mr. Smuts, continuing his speech, said the Government only decided to make the deportations after many days of the most careful thought. The Transvaal Peace Preservation Ordinance of 1913 empowered the Government to summarily expel dangerous persons. General Smuts expressed the belief that if the deportees had been indicted in ordinary courts the Government would never have secured a conviction. In view of the attempts to fix the responsibility for the deportations on Lord Gladstone, the Government wished it to be clearly understood that they alone were responsible.

Mr. Smuts quoted the case of the Hon. G. B. Cole who was deported to East Africa in 1911 and roused cheers when mentioning that Mr. F. Macdonald was among the signatories to a memorial to Mr. Asquith endorsing the deportation of Mr. Cole.

General Smuts concluded by moving the second reading of the Indemnity Bill.

The Speech Praised.

London, Received February 7.
The speech is heartily praised by the Conservative evening newspapers, and is hailed as completely vindicating the Union Government's action. All the papers emphasize the references to the overwhelming black population.

The Westminster Gazette characterizes the speech as a long, able and skilful statement. It emphasizes the point that Liberals do not challenge the plea of exceptional emergency. It says there are, however, special circumstances affecting the whole Empire, the chief of which is the deportations, which is really rather an evasion of the difficulty than a sign of strength. The journal points out that the Imperial Government had not deported Mr. Cole from its own jurisdiction, and a parallel case would be if the Union Government ordered an individual not to live in a native reserve but permitted him to live in Cape Town or Johannesburg. The deportations raised questions of law and policy affecting the Empire which must be most carefully discussed. The common sense view, says the newspaper, seems to be that the self-governing Colonies should consume their own smoke and not pass it on to others.

AN ESTATE'S WORTH.

VALUED TOO HIGH.

London, Received February 6.
Lord Derby, in a recent speech objected to the secret Land Commission's valuation of his Boodle estate at £3,000,000 and he offered to sell it to Baron de Forest for half that sum.
Baron de Forest, Liberal M.P. for West Ham (North), has now written accepting the offer, subject to certain conditions.

JAPANESE IMMIGRATION. MR. BRYAN'S HOPES.

[Reuter's Service To The "Telegraph"]

London, Received February 6.
Reuter's Washington correspondent says that at a meeting of the Immigration Committee of the House of Representatives, Mr. Bryan urged the Committee to take no action on the bill to exclude Asiatics, introduced by Mr. Biker of California. Mr. Bryan said unless untoward circumstances arose, he hoped an amicable adjustment of the Japanese question would be reached. Agitation in Congress at this time, he said, would be unfortunate.

A majority of the Committee readily agreed that nothing should be done that would in any wise embarrass the Administration.

The War Office has offered Sir Ernest Shackleton army officers if he desires.

London, Received February 6.

LATE TELEGRAMS.

Government's Monetary Position.

Peking, Jan. 31.

All the Government charges for 1913 secured upon the Customs and Salt revenues have been paid up. The Quintuple Group advanced $2,000,000 to the Government to tide them over the Chinese New Year, and of this $1,000,000 was secured upon the salt revenue. At present $10,500,000 of the salt payments have been deposited with the banks of the Quintuple Group to meet the semi-annual payments of the Crip-Lynn due in March amounting to $1,250,000 and the Reorganization Loan amounting to $6,250,000.

According to conservative estimates the revenue from the Salt Gabelle is estimated to amount to $360,000,000 during 1914, and given favourable conditions it may amount to thirty-nine millions leaving an estimated surplus after the payment of all present charges of $1,700,000 available for purposes of the new loan.

Moreover, it is hoped to charge the amount needed for the reorganization of the Salt Gabelle upon current revenue without touching the $20,000,000 of the Reorganization Loan which have been earmarked for that purpose.

Sir Richard Dane's Scheme.

The Peking Daily News states that Sir Richard Dane since his return has been occupied in drawing up a plan to reform the salt administration. If the Government rejects his plan, Sir R. Dane will not accept the Advisoryship of the Salt Administration.

FUTURE ALBANIA. TRANSFERRING RULERSHIP.

[Reuter's Service To The "Telegraph"]

London, Received February 7.
Reuter's correspondent at Berlin says the future Court Marshal of the Prince of Wied leaves to-morrow for Darazzo, accompanied by a suite of sixteen, to prepare for the arrival of the Prince.

It is stated that the Prince visits next week the Courts of Vienna and Rome and then returns to Germany to await the Albanian deputations.

Reuter's correspondent at Darazzo says the Commission of Control has given Essad Pasha an official mission to head the Albanian deputations going to Germany to offer the Crown to the Prince of Wied. Essad Pasha starts on the 12th inst. for Germany.

PEACE CONFERENCE.

THIS YEAR'S GATHERING.

London, Received February 6.

Reuter's correspondent at Washington says President Wilson has issued invitations to the third Peace Conference at the Hague in 1914. It is understood President Wilson acted at the request of Queen Wilhelmina of the Netherlands.

It is believed that he advocates levying a tax at the point of production and the establishment of branch treasury offices as depositories for Government funds, while the Government is of the opinion that it will be difficult to carry out the former proposal—Reuter to the N. C. Daily News.

Outer Mongols Near Kalgan. Peking, Feb. 2.

The Urga Mongols having killed Malunga, and seventy of his adherents, apparently for the reason that he was in treaty with the Chinese, are now establishing themselves in Inner Mongolia about a hundred miles north of Kalgan. They are appointing officials and administering the country.

The Chinese troops have retired upon Kalgan leaving only pickets to guard the approaches from the plateau.

The exact date of the conference with Russia at Khabarovsk is not yet settled, but it probably will not take place before the spring.—N. C. Daily News Correspondent.

Chang Hsun Against White Wolf.

Peking, Feb. 2.

President Yuan Shih-kai having inquired of General Chang Hsun whether he would be willing to undertake the conquest of the White Wolf Brigades, General Chang has replied in the affirmative.

It is now stated officially that the President has ordered General Chang Hsun to march his army into Anhui to exterminate the vipers.—N. C. Daily News Correspondent.

FATAL MOTOR-CAR ACCIDENT.

Two Foreigners Killed Near Tsingtau.

Tsingtau, Jan. 24.

A fatal automobile accident occurred at Syfang, a suburb of Tsingtau on Wednesday evening, the 22nd instant. Three men with a Chinese chauffeur were returning from a ride in the country, and as they were passing near a restaurant in Syfang, suddenly decided to turn in. One called to the driver, and he being unfortunately a man of insufficient experience, attempted to take the turn when it was altogether too late, considering the speed and the shortness of the turn. The result was that the car plunged off the road and capsized over an embankment. One man, Mr. Valder, of Carlowitz & Co., sprang clear of the car and escaped with a broken arm, and some injury to his side. The two other men, Mr. Harms and Mr. Kuasch, were caught under the overturned car and instantly killed.

So far as one can see there is no special blame to attach to anyone. It is just one of those inevitable accidents which are periodically made to speed and pleasure. It is altogether probable that a man of longer experience would not have attempted the turn on so short notice, as such matters are not so much a question of skill as of judgement as to how a machine will act under given conditions.

The two men who were killed were married, one of them only a short time. The driver was practically unhurt.—N. C. Daily News Correspondent.

Court Congestion.
If it be still considered an extravagance by the Government to appoint a permanent third Judge, we do not see why in times of great pressure in the Courts, a practising barrister should not be appointed a temporary Judge. In the full Court Ordinance of 1912 provision is made for the temporary appointment of a practising barrister to sit as a Judge in the Appeal Court in the event of a Judge of His Majesty's Supreme Court in China not being available. Why not extend this principle? If there be objection to the temporary appointment of a practising barrister to sit as a Judge in Summary or Original Jurisdiction, could not an arrangement be made for the Attorney General or the Crown Solicitor to serve as a Judge when the work of the Court gets so much in arrears? This present state of the Cause List, with upwards of fifty sessions awaiting trial, while both Judges are sitting in Appeal Jurisdiction, and are likely to be for another week or more, is proof enough that the services of an additional Judge are urgently needed, if only temporarily.

South China Morning Post.

Militarist Extravagance.
Even Sweden has joined in the orgie. Unfortunately thousands of men and women are feeling acutely the pinch of higher prices. Persistently the demand goes up for improvement of economic conditions and threats are constantly being made, which, if carried out, will affect the whole fabric of society. There is no doubt that Great Britain must soon be faced with the mightiest crisis in history. Wise statesmanship and a firm hand may ward off the danger for a time, but come it must unless the Powers come to some arrangement to crush the greatest and most destructive of all parasites—the bloated militarist. Immense good could be accomplished if only half the naval and military bill were applied to the furtherance of necessitous production, but as matters at present stand, industry is cribbed, cabined and confined because the entire resources of the country are being bled for weapons of war.

China Mail.

British Warship Building

In 1913.
The vessels launched last year will, when completed, represent a value of £10,440,000 as compared with £13,730,000 in the previous year, the increase being thus £2,710,000. The year's work is the greatest for many years, if indeed, it has been exceeded, whether regard be had to tonnage, power, or value. The British ships include, as we have said, four battleships and a battle-cruiser, five light armoured cruisers, twenty-six destroyers, and six submarine boats. The work includes three battleships, three monitors, and all craft, which make together a displacement tonnage of 83,000 tons. This is three times the tonnage in the previous year, and the largest for many years. The machinery of these foreign vessels make up collectively 136,000 indicated horse-power, and the value of the vessels, when complete, will exceed £7,000,000. British firms at the same time have built boilers and machinery for other vessels constructed abroad. The value of such foreign work secured by British naval construction firms is an important addition to national revenue, apart altogether from the effect that such work has in stimulating the experimental and originality faculty of those responsible for designs.

Dundee: The Largest Ship.
An order for a vessel, which will be the largest constructed on the East Coast of Scotland, has been received by the Caledonian Shipbuilding and Engineering Company, of Dundee, from Messrs. Alfred Holt and Co., of Liverpool. The vessel will be of 10,000 tons carrying capacity.

A Slum Tragedy.
The body of a woman about 50 years of age, afterwards identified as a lawler named Margaret Ward, was found the other morning lying in an inner back court in the central part of Glasgow. Her skull had been fractured and there was a large wound on her forehead, bruises on her face, and marks on her throat as if she had been trodden on with a heavy boot. The police are of opinion that death was due to violence, but have been unable so far to trace her supposed assailant.

Canadian Car Ferry Steamer.
The Canadian Car ferry and ice-breaking steamer being built by Messrs. Cammell, Laird, and Co., of Birkenhead, for the Transcontinental Railway Company of Canada is nearly ready for launching. The vessel has special moving platforms for landing heavy locomotives and trains at varying stages of a tide, having a rise and fall of about 20ft.

Damages Against a Teacher.
At Birmingham County Court a boy named Frederick Allan Deakin, who sued through his father, was awarded £20 damages against James Bosker, headmaster of St. Silas Schools, L. C. For the plaintiff it was stated that on July 10 the headmaster punched him in the back because he did sum incorrectly. He has since been unable to attend school. A doctor deposed that the boy had curvature of the spine and had had tuberculous trouble.

Letter from President Wilson.
President Wilson, who received an address of congratulation from the Carlisle Corporation on his election, has written a letter to Sir Cecil Spring Rice in which he says:—It gives me the greatest pleasure that the representatives of the city should have thought of me in this way and of my connection with the city, and I beg you will convey to them my heartfelt thanks. I hope that some day it might be my privilege to visit Carlisle again, and once more review what seemed to me all but memories of the place. President Wilson's mother was born in Carlisle.

Abolishing the Theatre Queue.
It is no longer necessary to wait in the pit queue at the Adelphi Theatre, London. The pit has been entirely re-seated with tip-up seats, numbered and to be reserved, but the tickets are sold at the theatre on the day only and not until 6.30 each day (12.30 on matinee days). The position, it is pointed out, is thus the same as under the queue system, except that the "pittee" can buy his reserved seat, go and have his tea, or do what other business he may have, and then take his seat when the pit doors are opened or during the performance.

Metropolitan Asylums Board.
The Metropolitan Asylums Board unanimously decided at their last meeting to apply to the College of Arms to have a Patent of Arms recorded. Mr. Moncrieff, who brought the proposal forward, said he had been told by a high authority that the Board was of sufficient importance for the grant of arms with supporters. The total cost would be £131 10s., and this would be more than returned in the increased prestige of the Board. Hitherto the figure of St. Luke, which seemed most appropriate, had formed the chief part of the device on the seal of the Board.

RAILWAYS IN CHINA.

Competition in the British Sphere.

The Times Peking correspondent writing under date of January 9, says:—

A belief is current that the Chinese are about to consent to an important alteration in the alignment of the Belgian trunk railway from Lanchow to Haichow. Haichow having proved an examination to be unsuitable as a port, the Chinese are being pressed to agree that the railway, after crossing the Tientsin-Pukow line near the Shangtang border, shall run southward along Kiangsu province to Haimeiting, on the northern bank of the Yangtze, a small port within 50 miles of Shanghai.

The change involves the construction of a line parallel to the British section of the Tientsin-Pukow line, and is likely to affect the traffic of the latter. This aspect of the question, however, is of minor importance compared with the prospect of the establishment of the terminus of what must eventually be the longest railway in China at a new port actually on the Yangtze and within a stone's throw of the greatest emporium of British trade in the Far East. So definite a challenge to the British position in the Yangtze district, following on the recent intrusion of French enterprise at Pukow, provokes lively comment here.

If the Lanchow-Haichow Railway were a purely Belgian concern less importance might be attached to the present move. But it is well known that Belgian enterprise in China is largely financed by the French, while in some quarters it is believed to be supported politically and financially by Russia. The Lanchow-Haichow Railway realizes part of the long-cherished Russian scheme of building a railway from Russian Turkestan through Chinese Turkestan to Lanchow and thence into the heart of China. Should such a line ever be built, it will be purely Russian at its Western extremity, and, by reason of Russian relations with France, may very likely become subject throughout to the control of Russia.

The French are now demanding from the Chinese the sole right of constructing a line from Yunnanfu to Chengtu. Significance attaches to this scheme, because it involves the linking up of the French Yunnan Railway with the other great Belgian project from Chengtu to Tatsienfu, for which a concession was lately obtained. This Belgian scheme is really mainly French, and, it is suspected, partly Russian, and will inevitably connect hereafter with the Russian Trans-Mongolian Railway in the North, thereby creating another tremendous steel road based on Russian territory and potentially Russian throughout its length.

Without taking the somewhat fantastic view that Russia, under cover of French and Belgian railway enterprises, is preparing to swallow the whole of China, one must recognize that such enterprises constitute an encroachment on the British preserves in the Yangtze and an endeavour to acquire exclusive rights in Yunnan and Szechuan, in spite of the Anglo-French agreement to share equally in these regions.

BILLIARDS GOSSIP.

The Red Ball Merchant.

George Gray's entry may be likened to the sudden appearance of a cat among the pigeons. None of the other fellows know what he is going to do to them with his everlasting play upon the red ball. They can only imagine. "I mean has had a taste of the Australian quality with the crystal balls in a certain most one-sided encounter at the National Sporting Club. This led him to fight shy of the red-ball merchant ever since. Both Stevenson and Reece are also aware of what is in store for them if—and there is a big if here—the ivory balls prove anything like as easy to handle for the relay of losers. All the three English players are musing Gray at a great disadvantage, as I have before pointed out, owing to the absurdly inadequate state of the rules, which give with one hand and takes away with the other. This would be all right were it to cut in every direction. But as it leaves Gray a very wide open table to play his losing hazards off the red ball to his heart's content and shuts the door more than half-way in the faces of his championship rivals, where does sweet reasonableness stop and want of knowledge begin? You cannot apply the same rules as will best suit the game by constantly keeping it up-to-date and rubbing out three of the most prolific scoring strokes just because of their being overdone, and ruling the breakmaking to the really serious tests of skill.

Unfair Rules.
Upon my word, if I were in the place of Messrs. Inman, Stevenson, and Reece (perhaps it is as well that I am not!) not many hours would pass before I had lodged a protest at the uneven condition of the rules. If the losing hazards are going to go on indefinitely, why not the spot-stroke (a finer and more exacting form of the game), and the close cannons (of all kinds)? Can anybody tell me why not? George Gray has trained himself to play one set stroke—the in-off from the red ball—and despite a bunch of imitators he still stands out by himself as the losing hazard masterpiece. He is very great at it, too; and I take off my hat to him for the good he has done to billiards generally. George came in the shape of a very hearty tonic to English billiards when he made a somewhat modest debut before the sporting public. But supreme-talent will not long remain as comparatively unnoticed as he was. A succession of breaks each running into over a thousand points whetted the curiosity of the billiard enthusiasts throughout Britain. When he set the seal on a growing reputation by his remarkable achievements during his appearance in London, the points flowed from his original methods of stance and cue delivery as they had not done since the good old spot-stroke (still the backbone of the top-of-the-table game) was "warped off" by the powers that be. Adamless Eden.

Sturdy young men, who would be content to spend lives of indolent ease, are offered an opportunity to do so by becoming the husbands of rich, ducky belles of Easter Island, according to a story brought by Capt. Bourgeois, of the Schooner Capt. M. Campbell, from Papeete. Before leaving Papeete, said the captain, an envoy from the young women of Easter Island begged he crew to return with him to become the husbands of a number of rich spinsters, and the masters of their cattle and sheep. Capt. Bourgeois hastened to set sail before the matrimonial inducements could rob him of his crew. It was said that the crew of the schooner El Dorado, which was wrecked on Easter Island several months ago, have qualified as husbands.

HONGKONG, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 7, 1914.

BRIGANDAGE AND ITS PREVENTION.

We have referred before now to the President's penchant for writing mandates which are marked by the loftiest of sentiments and by advice to Provincial officials which is based on sound good sense. But it is doubtful how far the lessons inculcated by these means are laid to heart and the advice followed and applied. Only the other day we remarked on official apathy in Honan which had permitted the "White Wolf" movement to spread to great dimensions when it might easily have been nipped in the bud. We find that the President has just issued a mandate dealing with the prevalence of brigandage which touches this very point. Although he does not specifically mention "White Wolf," it is clear that his observations are inspired by that brigand's doings.

He attributes the growth of the trouble to the cowardice or negligence of the local magistrates. With them lies the well-being and safety of the people and it is for them to take preventive measures when trouble begins. The President quotes an old saying that "a good magistrate is worth ten thousand troops," (he is famous for making use of arresting thoughts or old saws) and urges this saying as food for much thought. This is all very true. Local officials, if they are active and alert, should be able to sense trouble before it commences, or, at least, to read the earliest signs of it, and to take steps accordingly. But we doubt whether even the most moral mandate will rouse an indifferent or cowardly magistrate or governor. What should be done is to whip negligent men out of their positions and to replace them by others who have the welfare of the people at heart. There must be sufficient men of that stamp about and they ought to have been discovered by now.

In districts where bad elements are abundant the Civil Governors shall choose the best and most capable officials as magistrates to proceed to their posts and act according to this order, and troops should be despatched to pacify the disturbed districts," says the President. Pacification by force is only a temporary measure; prevention is better than cure; and after pacification there must be officials appointed who are capable of ensuring permanent peace. Such is the burden of the order. This is excellent in theory, and if only it can be carried out, brigandage should find less scope in the future. But we confess that we should like to see the promised move against "White Wolf" carried speedily into effect. That is the first and most necessary business, and the rest can wait. It is good to discuss how such things may be prevented in future, but it will be better to have the people in Honan rid of the evil first and the Province put into shape for the application of those admirable ideals.

The Deportations.

Big issues have been raised by the deportation of Labour leaders from South Africa, and it may be taken for granted that we have by no means heard the last of the matter as yet. The arrival of the deportees in England will doubtless be the signal for a renewal of the Labourite agitation, but before that the subject will come up for debate in the House of Commons on the promised amendment to the Address from the Throne. Further than that, there is a possibility of the legality of the deportations being contested in the Courts of law. There is no likelihood, therefore, of the question being allowed to drop into the back ground. One point in connection with the removal of the obnoxious personages has now been made quite clear—namely, that the attacks on Lord Gladstone were quite unjustified, since the Union Government as such has admitted that it alone was responsible.

Drastic Action Needed.
No-one can read the outline of Mr. Smuts' speech which has reached us without feeling that the Government was placed in a position in which quick, deliberate and drastic action was necessary. The Labour leaders, he said, aimed at revolution and civil war, and the ordinary law never contemplated such a situation. There is bound, of course, to be a good deal of sentiment talked about "the liberty of the subject," but when men incite others to defy the law they must assuredly expect to have that liberty jeopardised. Whether the deportations were justified without a prior trial is quite another point, and, in connection with the sending of the agitators to England we can well appreciate the remark of one "journalist" that the self-governing Colonies should consume their own smoke and not pass it on to others. England surely has enough troubles of her own just now.

NAVAL AND MILITARY.

Intimations of Interest to the Far East.

Captain R. L. Barton, from School of Gunnery, has been appointed to Royal Garrison Artillery, Hongkong.
The vacancy for a quarter-master in the Borderers has been filled by the advancement of Sergeant-Major E. K. Laman of the 1st Battalion at Borden Camp. Lieutenant and Quarter-master Laman has served over 20 years in the regiment, and was promoted to warrant rank in 1903.

Captain and Quarter-master H. Floyd, who has just retired from the South Wales Borderers, was latterly serving with the 2nd Battalion at Tientsin, North China. He served 15 years in the ranks and eight years as a warrant officer before getting his commission in the Borderers in 1903. A non-commissioned officer he served in the Egyptian Expedition, 1882, including the battle of Tel-el-Kebir (medal with clasp and Khedive's star).
The Renown, battleship (built in 1895 at a cost of £746,247), Florida, light cruiser, and the T.B.D.s Foam, Whiting, Virago, and Taku have been transferred to the sale list. The Florida was launched at Pembroke in November, 1893, and recently returned to England from the China Station; the Foam was built by Messrs. Thornycroft, and recently returned to England from the Mediterranean; the Virago, Whiting, and Taku have been for some years past on the China Station, on which they are substituted by destroyers transferred from the Mediterranean Station. The Taku was formerly in the Chinese Navy, and was captured when the Taku forts were taken at the time of the Boxer rebellion.

Examination of Midshipmen.
An examination of midshipmen with seniority of September, 1911, in seamanship and navigation commenced on January 14 at Devonport. The candidates were from the Bellerophon, Lion, and New Zealand.

Ratings for China Station.
Ratings for the battleship Triumph and the river vessels Kinsha, Widgeon, Woodlark, Snipe, and Nightingale, employed on the China Station, embarked in the cruiser Doris at Devonport on January 12 for conveyance to Hongkong.

A Chinese detective making a raid on a gambling den at No. 161, Connaught Road, captured a number of men who on appearance at Police Court this morning were fined $5 each by Mr. J.R. Wood.

Night Express Trains.
We hear there is a probability of a service of night express trains being inaugurated in the near future on the Kowloon-Canton Railway. If the scheme is carried through, a train may leave Canton in time to reach Kowloon about midnight, shortly after which another may depart for Canton.

Y.M.C.A. Worker.
Mr. and Mrs. L. W. Messer are staying at the Hongkong Hotel. They proceeded to Manila from here and return to Hongkong after a few days in Manila. Mr. Messer is prominently connected with the Y.M.C.A. movement in America, particularly in Chicago. He has also concerned himself very enthusiastically in the movement in China.

Nankin's Cargo.
Amongst the cargo shipped by the s.s. Nankin on the 4th inst. were 200 bales of hemp for Antwerp; 53 bawls of copper ore for Hamburg; 443 bales of waste silk for Manchester; 1,800 bales of hemp, 522 packages of five-crackers, 862 bales of staves, and 100 rolls of matting, and 100 bales of tobacco leaves for London; 100 bales of waste silk and 500 slabs of tin for Marouilles; and 300 slabs of tin for Port Said.

Cautioned.
A goldsmith charged with receiving a bangle knowing it to have been stolen was represented by Mr. R. F. C. Master, of Messrs. Johnson Stokes and Master, at the Police Court before Mr. J. R. Wood, this morning. The magistrate remarked that when he tried the man charged with stealing the bangle he came to the conclusion that the present defendant had no knowledge of the bangle having been stolen. He was discharged with a caution.

Referee's Board.
A meeting of the referees' Board of the Hongkong Football Association is to be held on Monday evening at the R. E. Theatre, when two complaints by the Referee, in the R.G.A. v. R.E. match on January 31 will be enquired into. A complaint against a D.C.L.L. Band player for using insulting remarks, and against a referee for hesitation in giving his decisions, and for playing extra time will also be investigated.

1889.

HONGKONG TWENTY-FIVE YEARS AGO.

Compiled from the "Hongkong Telegraph" files for the Week Ending February 7, 1889.

The Polo Club.
February 1.—"We are glad to observe that the recently started Polo Club is displaying unexpected vitality, and showing promise of becoming a popular institution in our limited world of sport. Thanks to the energy of Capt. Collinson and Fletcher, ably seconded by several civilian and military lovers of the game, matches about twice a week have regularly taken place, providing excellent sport and attracting considerable attention from the public."

[We could wish that we had a polo club to-day showing even ordinary vitality. But that would also be unexpected.]

Macao Again.
February 2.—"A new feature of Macao newspapers is to publish a weekly list of birth-days, occurring in the Holy City, with all particulars, biographical and otherwise. The individuals whose names and domestic celebrations have thus become public property, are duly complimented on the auspicious occasion, and in the evening Monkey-town holds high revelry at their respective residences."

[Never a chance missed of getting in a nasty jab at Macao in those days.]
Soldiers and Police not Admitted.
February 2.—"The adjourned meeting of the members of the Rifle Association was held last evening for the purpose of considering the following proposal in addition to the rules:—'No member of the Army and Navy shall be eligible for election who holds a lower rank than that of a commissioned officer, and no member of the Police of a lower rank than that of Inspector.' The proposal was carried by thirteen votes to seven."

The Sequel.
February 4.—"A stirring leader on the Rifle Association's decision alleges that but for the initial help of soldiers and police it must have died a natural death. 'Goes on: 'The question is, have the military and police a right to claim membership if so minded? We think, and all unbiased, broad-minded people will think that they have, from their timely help at the beginning, from the great privileges they have conceded to the Association, from their usefulness now, and as strongly as anything, from their equality as Britons and brothers. In our opinion they have been excluded by a narrow-souled clique who desired to keep the prizes among themselves and who, by specious argument and conciliating the officers in the two branches of the service, managed to influence the small percentage of members who decided the matter into seeing it with their own jaundiced eyes.'"

[That kind of writing was intended to hurt, and no doubt did hurt.]

LES CLOCHES DE CORNEVILLE.

To-night's Philharmonic Concert.

We think Mr. Denman Fuller is wise in selecting the distinctive feature of the annual concerts of the Philharmonic Society from the lighter, not to say trivial, category of opera. At home it is customary for the local choral Societies (perhaps because they are able to count on the assistance of professional singers brought down for "the night" from London to sustain the more intricate parts) to torture their audiences with Grand Opera or, worse still, oratorios. Who has not endured amateur renderings of Wagner or Handel? Beatus ille. Such high falutin' performances cannot appeal to a mixed "popular" audience and convey the impression of "showing off" before long-suffering friends. Last year we had "Merle Engleland," which was most enjoyable, and this evening we are to be regaled with "Les Cloches de Corneville."

What years it takes one back! Long before modern musical comedy was thought of, or comic opera, to the old pre-Dorothy days of burlesque and opera-buffe, "Les Cloches de Corneville" was first seen in London in 1878, having been produced the year previous at the Folies Dramatiques in Paris. The plot, which is well-known to most and does not greatly concern the present occasion, is most romantic and centres round the old miser Gaspard, who takes advantage of the credulity of Corneville to find a safe hiding place for his hoard in the haunted belfry of the castle. The composer was unfortunate in his libretto, which is quite futile and inadequate. The music, however, although of the lightest and obviously aiming at popularity of a transient description, took London by storm. "The Legend of the Bells" with its haunting "Ding dong" refrain, and the pretty chorus "Just look at that, just look at that," were heard all over the town. So great was the English success that two of Planquette's later operas, "Rip van Winkle" and "Nell Gwynne" were both honoured by London production before they were seen in the composer's own country.

Robert Planquette was born in Paris in 1830. He started to earn his living and attained considerable celebrity by playing the piano and leading a café troupe. To those who are aware of this fact, his music will always recall the "popular" audience he was accustomed to cater for. It is "catchy" and superficial to a degree. Although he wrote several other pieces besides "Les Cloches" not one of them achieved the success of his first effort. He died in 1903.

The concert version, selections from which we are to hear to-night and which only contains those numbers suitable for orchestral use, has been arranged by Mr. David J. Thomas and was first performed by the Central London Choral and Orchestral Society at Queen's Hall in January last year. It was a happy thought to rescue these tunesome old melodies from the oblivion which was rapidly beginning to enshroud them and give them a new lease of life. The song which Mrs. Robertson is giving, "And though my coward heart, faint would not," and the rapturous Waltz-song, "That night I'll never forget," allotted to Mr. Cawsey, are numbers which deserve to be recalled.

In addition, we are to hear the fine "Soldiers' Chorus" from Faust, the stirring "March of the Men of Harlech," the "Bluebells of Scotland" and many other homely but acceptable things, not to mention the "Rhapsody on a well-known air" specially composed for the occasion by Mr. Denman Fuller. Really, the Colony is surprisingly rich in musical talent. Rhapsodies, musical "stunts" when shall we unearth a composer of Grand Opera? And Mr. Fuller is so versatile. Are we not to behold his famous green plush curtain for the first time? Those who are going to the Philharmonic Concert to-night, will assist in making history and there is every promise of their spending a very enjoyable evening.

THE HONGKONG TELEGRAPH. EXTRA

HONGKONG, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 7, 1914.

SHORT STORY.

THE QUEEN'S PEARL.

BY EDITH MACVANE.

That afternoon, after two hours' painful and intense thinking in a darkened room, Fanny Gordon leaped from her sofa, snatching her fingers like one who has found an answer to a knotty problem. And, sitting at her desk, she swiftly wrote the following letter:

"We have been working on the wrong track. Please be in the hall of the Astoria to-night at half past six beside the desk of the clerk. I have information for you."—F.G.

This missive she despatched by special messenger. Then, having stood for an instant deep in thought, she unlocked her trunk and took from it a stationer's box of cardboard, about eight inches by six. The cover, when she removed it, disclosed the interior already packed neatly with tissue paper and white absorbent cotton. Taking a sheet of note-paper, she hurriedly wrote a couple of lines upon it, signing the name of Hazel Perkins. Laying this message on top of the tissue paper, she tied up the box with professional neatness and a large number of accurately made red seals. Taking up the pen again, she wrote the address:

Baroness Helene V. Wilmhutz
Hotel Astoria.

The package thus completed, she carried it downstairs to the clerk, and bade him put it at once into the safe; then, at eight o'clock, when the Baroness came down to dinner, to deliver it personally into her hands.

This little affair concluded, she went off, deep in thought, to her evening lesson.

The lady who represented the object and intention of these lessons did not, however, appear. The lines on Fanny's white forehead deepened. But an hour later, when, with her little dog under her arm, she knocked at the door of the Baroness's room, nothing could have succeeded the careless roteness of her girlish beauty.

"Sty, Baroness! I've got just the dandiest news ever—a letter from mamma. She'll be here to-morrow night! Isn't that grand?"

"Then adieu to our charming intimacy, dear child!" The Baroness, a beautiful picture in her tea-gown of white satin and fur, moved languidly on her pink silk cushions and sighed.

"Now, madame, don't say that!" returned Fanny, with an embarrassed air. "I'm sure mamma'll be every bit as crazy about you as I am myself! And, anyway, we have to practise our duets. Oh, say! why weren't you there last afternoon, at the lesson at Calderoni's?"

The Baroness sighed again delicately. "I don't know. I didn't really feel in the mood. And then, I've a bit of a sore throat."

The young judge printed severely at the elegant trifle of braided grass and turquoises, lying open on the tea-table beside her hostess.

"Too many of those," she said accusingly. "You're smoking them all the time. Of course, you've got no voice left!"

"Which being, true," smiled the Baroness Helene, "I might as well profit by the fact to take another!" And, stretching out a creamy and jewelled hand, she helped herself to a gold-tipped cigarette.

Fanny, stooping, gave sugar to the little dog. Her eyes were, however, on the cigarette-case.

"What a perfect stunner it is —so original and artistic," she observed. "I don't wonder you were early to eat these two brats when they ran off with it this morning. May I look at it?" And with a sudden gesture she reached out her hand and picked up the cigarette-case from the wide arm of the Baroness's chaise-longue. A sharp sense of adventure possessed her, born of two circumstances: the Baroness's quick breath, which had in it something indescribably menacing and savage; and a flashing vision of the morning's strange scene, of the up-lifted iron poker, and the foul words shrieked at the little dog.

"It's so precious to me!" sighed Helene sentimentally. "You know why, cherie Helene—please give it back to me!" With a sympathetic smile that veiled a sigh, Fanny laid the open case upon the table. After all, was it not possible that the Baroness spoke the truth?—since a minute examination of the cigarette-case had proved the absolute non-existence of any reason, except the sentimental one alleged, for its amazing preciousness to its owner. Lining it had none, nor secret pocket; nor the slightest possibility of any contents except its normal and legitimate one of a row of gold-tipped Egyptian cigarettes.

With a greedy gesture, the Baroness stretched out her hand to snatch up her treasure. Then, catching Fanny's eye fixed upon her, she seemed by a great muscular effort to dominate her betraying eagerness, bestowed merely a light cross upon her beloved souvenir, and sank back again among her embroidered cushions. By some strange compulsion, rather than by the exercise of her actual sight, Fanny was aware that the gray eyes smiling so sweetly upon her were on guard like those of lion-tamers.

"When mamma comes, we must all go to the opera evening," she began. Then suddenly her voice faltered, her colour rose. She caught her breath.

"To-morrow, then, you quit biting my shoe!" she cried, with a poke of her foot at the tiny Pomeranian. Then, with the gayest air in the world, she continued to outline schemes of next evening. But her head whirled, her pulse was

For only in that instant had her eyes taken in the fact that of the half dozen cigarettes in the open case of the Baroness Helene, one was fully a quarter of an inch longer than its mates, and tipped with dull instead of with burnished gold.

Her lips continued to move, outlining the schemes of an automobile excursion with "mamma" to Saint-Germain-en-Laye, the while her mind worked busily.

"In this woman before me it is evident that I am dealing with an intelligence of the very first order. Such intellects, we are told by foremost students of crime, hide their objects of value by not putting them in hiding-places at all. Circumstances, however, have forced Fanny to betray that her cigarette-case is the hiding-place of something exceedingly precious. And now the question is: who is going to win out, she or I?"

Meanwhile, with her eyes on the clock, her sudden thought

"Twenty after six. No, she's a desperate woman. Best for me not to move alone. At half past ix Raoul will be downstairs!"

So for ten minutes Fanny talked.

The gilt clock on the chimney-piece chimed one. Half past six! Fanny started. Then she swallowed hard, licked her dry lips into a smile, and leaned toward the other woman:

"Say, but I've pretty nearly talked you asleep, haven't I? And I've talked myself dry. I know that. Say, maybe you're right about cigarettes being good. If you'll let me, I'll try one!"

And, laughing, she stretched out her hand toward the case. In spite of her languid grace, the Baroness von Wilmhutz was quicker than her guest.

"Permit me, cherie!" And, selecting a cigarette with a burnished tip, she passed it smilingly to her guest. Then, striking a match from her little gold box, she performed the graceful service of lighting it.

On the table, like a little frontier province between two hungry powers, lay the case.

Whatever was Helene's inward attitude, her outward calm was superb. "You make me quite envious. I must have a smoke too!" she said. The next moment it was with difficulty that Fanny restrained herself from shrieking aloud; for her hostess, carefully selecting the longest cigarette, placed its dull gold tip defiantly between her rouged lips, and, striking a wax match, touched the yellow flame to the tip.

The tip glowed red. The spiral of smoke went upward. Fanny trembled all over. As Helene's long gray eyes met hers, it seemed to her that she saw in them a cold and calculating defiance.

"Bibi! Mademoiselle, these French cigarettes are no better than poison. Fling yours away—like this!" And, suiting the action to the word, she pinched the smoldering tip of her cigarette and tossed it behind her.

There it lay on the rug. For an instant Fanny contemplated the use of violence. But not only was the blonde Baroness larger and more powerful than Fanny, but, if she acquired notoriety in the police courts, Fanny would entirely ruin her future with the Secret Service of Paris. No, softly, softly—

She smiled winningly at her hostess. "I'm going back to my room to 'dress now,' she announced. "And say, when are you going to let me give you back that pearl? Three million francs!" She stopped short.

Into the back of her brain shot a recollection of cert in words of the Baroness, that night she had come to the young girl's room with the pearl. She had been shaking with horror—of what? And was that horror real or feigned? At any rate, here was the only straw in sight, and Fanny grasped it.

"Three million francs," she whispered. "It's more than one person is meant to have the responsibility of, and I—oh, Baroness, there at your feet! A rat! A big gray rat!"

The foam ebbed to the Baroness's answering shriek. Catching her white satin, draped about her, she sprang nimbly upon the table. And Fanny, hurrying herself forward, snatched the coveted cigarette from the earst, and fled toward the door. In the instant in which she fumbled with the knob, her brookward glancing eyes beheld an infuriated woman with a knife upraised in her hand.

The door yielded. Fanny slipping through, slammed it behind her. The thought in her mind was: "How lucky that I kept on my street clothes, while Helene must wait for a cloak!"

Down the corridor she fled. Luckily a lift was descending. She signalled it, and a moment later found herself downstairs in the hall of the hotel. Raoul, that good Raoul! Sure enough, there he was, standing by the desk. She walked up to him, smiled, and spoke in a swift undertone: "Vicente, quick! Give me your cigarette-case!"

For an instant he stared at her as if she were mad; then, with admirable sang froid, drew from his pocket a case of plain burnished silver, which he opened and politely presented to the young girl. With a swift gesture she selected one of the gold-tipped cigarettes within, replaced it with the slightly burned cigarette she carried in her hand, snapped the case shut, and restored it to him.

"Into your inside pocket!"

"Mon Dieu, mademoiselle! But you Americans are born mad!"

Nevertheless, he obeyed her.

The next instant the door of the lift opened, and a tall figure, wearing a long wrap of black satin and fur, emerged and almost ran down the hall. Fanny, with a slow step, as if her walk had been an uninterrupted one, strolled on toward the door. With furious haste, the Baroness von Wilmhutz swept up to the desk, where the clerk, sleek and prosperous, sat watching over the comfort of his guests.

"Monsieur, I demand that you detain that young American lady! Call the police! Search her—search her room! She has stolen from me a pearl worth three million francs!"

For an instant there was silence. Then the foyer hummed with excitement. While Fanny Gordon, the centre of all the excitement, turned deliberately and walked back to the desk. The Vicomte de Chatterault, standing dignifiedly aloof, groaned within himself.

"She's bungled it! That's what I get for trusting an American. She'll get us into the papers, and spoil all!"

"Search her!" demanded the Baroness fiercely. "Seize her! Telephone for the police!"

"Mademoiselle!" bawled the horrified proprietor. "I am sure, if you will, you can explain this disagreeable circumstance—"

Fanny Gordon, with unruffled calm, turned to the clerk.

"Monsieur, will you kindly fetch the package that I gave you this afternoon?"

The fat little Frenchman turned to his superior. "Monsieur, it is in the safe. If you will have the goodness to help me open it."

A moment later they reappeared, the clerk carrying Fanny's nearly sealed stationery box.

"Monsieur, one instant. At what hour did I give you that package?"

"At four o'clock this afternoon, mademoiselle!"

"And with what instructions?"

"That I should give it to the Baroness von Wilmhutz when she came down to dinner, mademoiselle."

"Very well. You may give it to her now."

The Baroness, taking the box with obvious reluctance, hesitated and turned away.

"I'll take it to my room," she said, with a coldly shrinking look at the crowd about her.

Fanny raised her hand. "No. Stop! Monsieur the proprietor, the Baroness von Wilmhutz has publicly brought against me a charge of the utmost gravity. I have the right to demand that my vindication be as public. Demand of madame that she open that box!"

Before the proprietor could open his mouth, the Baroness turned with a look of disdain. "There is no need of this theatrical display," she said. "If you insist, of course I will open the box here. Give me a knife!"

Awkwardly her soft hands cut the knots. In spite of his deliberately assumed indifference, Raoul de Chatterault was among those who crowded up to see what the opening of the box would disclose. The next moment the blood rushed into his brain. For there, when the tissue-paper wrappings withdrawn, his straining eyes descried for a moment the white and luminous outlines of an enormous pearl. Then the Baroness's beautiful gray eyes raised for an instant, fixed themselves fiercely on the cigarette in Fanny Gordon's hand.

"Read the card, Baroness, and you'll understand what a mistake you've made!" said the latter sweetly.

The Baroness, covering the pearl, picked up a card that lay beside it. She started, flushing an angry red. Then, thrusting her recovered treasure under her arm, she forced herself to calmness.

"It was a mistake. Mademoiselle, I withdraw my charge. Good evening!" And, drawing her cloak about her, she swept up the hall toward the lift.

For once in his life, the Vicomte de Chatterault came near to losing his self-command. He walked up to Fanny. His face was white, his eyes glittered like two pin-points of rage. He spoke under his breath:

"Mademoiselle, I trusted you! And yet, having obtained possession—of it, you deliberately gave it back to that woman!"

Though Fanny's mien was one of careless and delicate coquetry, her reply was a flinty force.

"Vicente, obey me! We have no second to lose! Take a taxi-cab, give the man a louis for extra speed, drive to the Gare de Lyon! Unroll that cigarette I gave you, present the slip of paper at the consignee. Take the article to which it entitles you. Then, on driving back, call for a member of the Secret Police—the Chief, if possible! Then to the Ritz—engage a private dining room. I will join you there in an hour's time. If I am late, wait for my coming before opening the bag."

The Vicomte, listening to her coldly, shook his head.

"Pardon me, mademoiselle, but I have time for no wild-goose-chases to the Gare de Lyon. Now that I have seen the pearl with my own eyes, it shall not slip through my hands as you let it slip through yours. No; I have the certainty of its whereabouts, I telephone to my Chief about this very hotel. I remain here, and we take decisive measures to-night!"

"I take full responsibility for the Baroness. In a moment she will be on her way to the Gare de Lyon. For the love of God, Vicomte, do as I say—go!"

By the very intensity of the will power that blazed from her dark eyes, by the icy force of her whispered command, she bent the unwilling young man to obedience.

With the helplessness of one who despises himself for obeying, he repeated her directions, turned, and swiftly vanished through the hotel door.

Fanny Gordon, deep in thought, returned to her room. As she fumbled with her key, the door of the room opposite suddenly opened, and the Baroness slid out.

The next instant Fanny's wrist was seized and, with a dexterity that spoke of expert knowledge, Raoul's cigarette was extricated from it. The next instant the opposite door was closed and the corridor was as lonely as before.

Fanny gasped. But for the vanished cigarette, she might have thought the incident a dream.

Then she grinned. "It begins to look as if my theories might have some basis of fact!" she said to herself. And, entering her room, she made a hasty toilet for dinner.

VIII
At eight o'clock, with a discreet dinner dress of dark blue iridescent embroidery under her cloak, Fanny Gordon entered the Ritz.

"Please take me to the private dining-room of the Vicomte de Chatterault!" she commanded briefly.

The next moment she was ushered into a small dining-room furnished with great elegance in the English style; while on either side of the prettily set table stood the Vicomte de Chatterault and a short, stout man with fierce moustaches.

"Here is the young lady, Inspector!" said Raoul, smiling, as rosy and sparkling in her white cloak, Fanny Gordon entered the room. The waiter closed the door. Fanny uttered a little gasp of delight; for there on the table, amid the glistening whiteness of linen and crystal, she beheld the valise of English leather which she herself had carried from the Gare du Nord to the Gare de Lyon.

"Mademoiselle!" began the inspector, with unconcealed anger. "I hear that a very grave blunder has been made. The Swabian pearl, for which the reward has to-day been raised to half a million francs—I repeat, to half a million francs—has deliberately been given back into the hands of the thief, while Monsieur the Vicomte de Chatterault and I are sent about like porters, carrying pieces of old luggage about Paris!"

Fanny Gordon raised her quivering hand. Her voice was shaky, her colour was high.

"Please, monsieur," she begged, "won't you open the valise first? Afterward you can scold me as much as you like."

The inspector, grunting, drew a bunch of skeleton-keys from his pocket. In a few moments the valise, sprawling open, displayed a highly coloured and confused assortment of such articles as ladies carry with them when they travel.

Swiftly the contents were hurled out to right and left over the dainty settings of the dinner-table: silk stockings, lingerie, yellow-backed novels, satin slippers, silver and crystal toilet boxes, a morocco jewellery case.

Upon this last the inspector flung himself. It contained a watch and chain, set in turquoises. With a muttered explosion, he flung it to the floor. Raoul meanwhile, with eager hands, was opening and testing the books.

The inspector, with a grim face, began on the crystal pomade-boxes and the rolls of lingerie.

Fanny, very white, ran her hands about the lining of the valise. Nothing!

"Mademoiselle, I hope you are pleased with the result of your cleverness!" snarled the inspector, in a bitterness of disappointment that overcame his good manners.

Raoul said nothing; but, his blue eyes, fixed in silence upon her, made her realize that she had lost his respect.

"And yet," she said, with tears in her eyes, "it is impossible that I should be mistaken in my reasoning!"

"Mademoiselle," returned the inspector brutally, "it is not your reasoning that we are seeking, but the pearl!"

Suddenly, with a little cry, Fanny flung herself on a pair of satin slippers, each on its tree, which had been flung into the heap of rejected and rejected articles. With swift hands she jerked out the wooden forms from the slippers. The second tree, turned upside down, proved to be roughly hollowed out beneath and filled with cotton wool.

"Pardon me, mademoiselle!" The inspector had taken the tree from Fanny's trembling hands. With a fork from the dinner-table, he carefully pried out its closely packed contents. Then, with a swift touch, he unrolled the cotton wool.

"Nom d'un nom d'un nom!" For there, upon its bed of white wool, shining with a white lustre that held in it something of enchantment, lay an immense pearl.

Half an hour later, in the crowded dining-room of the Ritz, Fanny Gordon and the Vicomte de Chatterault sat facing each other at a little flower-trimmed table.

"But mademoiselle, two pearls! I cannot understand—" Fanny laughed. "One pearl, Vicomte," she corrected, "and one exquisite piece of imitation!"

The Vicomte drew a long breath. "Then that was the pearl which the inspector took off with him just now? And the imitation which you restored to the Baroness von Wilmhutz?"

Fanny nodded. Her bright eyes danced with triumph. Her youth, the consciousness of success, made of her an entrancing vision.

The Vicomte flung out his hands in token of surrender. "And I—I thought you were a fool!"

"But you didn't know all the facts!" returned Fanny eagerly. "You see, the other day, after the adventure of the piano, the Baroness divined that I was after the pearl. So she muzzled me in a manner that was a compliment to my character—by presenting me with the pearl itself, to keep for her. So there I was, bound in honour, bound hand and foot! Then, by accident, I dropped the pearl. It cracked. My despair!"

"But the very fact of the crack," cried Raoul, "proved that it wasn't a pearl at all!"

"So I learned when I carried it to Cartier's to be mended. And I learned moreover, that they themselves had obtained that magnificent piece of spoof for a lady, a client of theirs, only the other day. So I said to myself:

"What is her motive in placing this false pearl in my possession? And where is the real one, the great pearl of Swabia? Not in her possession. So much your elaborate search had proved. Then all of a sudden I remembered that valise! the valise which she herself was afraid to approach, and had employed me to carry for her from the Gare du Nord to the consignee at the Gare de Lyon—the consignee of Paris, monsieur, where thieves hide their booty, even murderers' dead!"

The Vicomte nodded quickly. "Yes, even last week! But go on."

"So this morning my opinion was confirmed. By accident, an odd little adventure with my dog caused her to betray the immense value she attached to her cigarette-case—which could not possibly contain the pearl itself, and therefore must contain the key to its possession!"

Softly the Vicomte clapped his hands. "Well reasoned, mademoiselle! Go on!"

"What else is there to tell? When I wrote you this afternoon to ask you to be at the hotel at half past six, it was to tell you that our search must now be directed, not toward seeking the Queen's pearl, but a claim-check on the consignee at the Gare de Lyon; a slip of white paper three inches by two. Had the Baroness Helene, in rolling it into a cigarette, clipped a quarter inch from its length and gilded its tip with gold leaf instead of ordinary gilt paint, she would probably never have lost it. However, she neglected these little precautions. While I, on my side, had luckily taken my precautions against the purpose with which I was sure she had put the false pearl in my keeping; this is, if necessity arose, to charge me with its theft. As you saw, I had already placed it in the hands of the clerk, with a little message inside: 'Ask Cartier to buy another one for you, and send the bill to me!' So, seeing I knew of her fraud, she swallowed her defeat in silence."

The Vicomte leaned across the table. "I suppose you heard," he said in a low voice, "that the Prince Consort, grown desperate, wired to-day that the reward had been increased to half a million francs. You, mademoiselle, deserve it all! But, unluckily, it must first pass through the hands of the police. But, I vouch for it, your share shall be no less than a hundred and thirty thousand francs."

The colour deepened in Fanny's face. Never had she looked more disarmingly youthful, more fragilily feminine. "Not bad, a week's work!" she mused. Then she raised her glass, with a little triumphant smile.

"Come, Vicomte, let us drink to the two much oodled little pets that we have saved from disaster—the Swabian Hair Ap- parent and the Peace of Europe!"

"But mademoiselle, two pearls! I cannot understand—" Fanny laughed. "One pearl, Vicomte," she corrected, "and one exquisite piece of imitation!"

(Reuter's Service To The "Telegraph.")

London, Received February 7.
Reuter's correspondent at Stockholm says the demonstration of poasantry in favour of stronger defence measures, to the number of 30,000, marched through the streets to the Palace. It was an inspiring sight, the procession being led by banners representing 24 Provinces.

His Majesty the King said he agreed with the peasants that the defence problem should be settled completely without delay, and he was determined not to yield thereon. He also affirmed that the fleet should be increased.

The movement arises from apprehensions of Russia.

INDECENT PICTURES.

Fine of $100 Imposed.

At the Police Court, this morning, Mr. J. R. Wood gave his decision in the case in which Chan Harr, manager of the Sincere Company, was charged with exhibiting indecent pictures, by means of miniature, binoculars, at the Company's stores.

Mr. T. H. King, Deputy Captain Superintendent of Police, prosecuted and Mr. Otto Kong-sing defended.

His Worship said:—

I have no hesitation in deciding that these articles sold by the defendant are pictures of an indecent and obscene character. No doubt in justifying this court, the sale of these pictures, the defendant has exercised a legal right; but there are some legal rights which it is creditable not to exercise, and this is one. On the facts found by the evidence the defendant is liable to be convicted either of the offence against provisions of the Vagrancy Act of 1824, alleged in the first charge or of the offence against the Common Law alleged in the second. Both charges have been brought against him; they are substantively similar, and have been brought as alternative charges. I find that both charges have been proved.

It remains to consider whether to proceed to conviction on the first or the second charge. The charge laid under the Vagrancy Act, is a summary charge. Conviction under this act catalogues the offender among rogues and vagabonds, along with other disreputable persons. Under this Act, the Magistrate may inflict a sentence of three months' imprisonment with hard labour; and in this Colony the Magistrate has no power to impose any sentence for this offence except one of imprisonment, without the option of a fine. In England the courts have been empowered by Statute to impose for this offence a fine not exceeding £25. This provision of the law has not been adopted in this colony and if the first charge stood alone in the present proceedings, the Court would be placed in this position, that it must either impose a sentence of imprisonment upon the defendant or can impose no sentence at all.

The second charge alleged is common law misdemeanour. This is an indictable offence. A prisoner tried at the Criminal Sessions of the Supreme Court on such an indictment may receive a sentence of twelve months' imprisonment with hard labour, or may be ordered to pay a fine not exceeding $500.

At the outset of the hearing of this case, the Deputy Superintendent of Police requested the Court to exercise summary jurisdiction in this matter. This request was acceded to. The limit of the magistrate's powers in summary jurisdiction is to sentence the defendant to six months' imprisonment with hard labour or in his discretion, to impose a fine not exceeding $100.

In considering what conviction it is just to record and what punishment to select, I have to remember that this matter has not been recently brought to public notice in the colony through any criminal prosecution. For this reason it would seem somewhat harsh to sentence the defendant to imprisonment.

This consideration will, however, not avail persons selling indecent pictures after this date. A future offence will assume a grave character through the publicity which may be given to the present conviction. At this time when the younger generation is eager for what is new or may be attracted to things of good report, a heavy responsibility rests upon those few commercial men who like Chan Harr stoop to seek a profit in exhibiting the base pictures and films.

NEW BILLIARD TABLE.

Uncovering Function at Kowloon Dock.

The management of the Hongkong and Whampoa Dock has very kindly presented the members of the Dock Reading and Recreation Club with a splendid new billiard table, and at the uncovering ceremony which took place last night, about fifty gentlemen assembled to witness the opening match between Mr. H.T. Richardson, O.P.R., and Mr. Rutter, of the Docks, an old Hongkong billiard champion who is about to retire from active employment very shortly.

The fact that neither player was acquainted with the table naturally went against anything being done in the way of brilliant breaks and whilst Mr. Rutter is to be congratulated on the highest break of the evening, a neatly compiled 15, Mr. Richardson is entitled to sympathy for the unfortunate run in which he had the misfortune just to fail at a simple position-making shot.

The players were about level when the match was called, but from this point onwards Mr. Rutter secured a lead which he never relinquished and reached the century whilst Mr. Richardson was at 68. Both players were loudly applauded at the conclusion.

Mr. Purvis, the President of the Club, in opening the evening said they were there that evening to celebrate a great event in the history of the Club. They had received that new handsome gift from the management for their pleasure and edification. He thanked upon Mr. Richardson and Mr. Rutter to open the game (Applause).

The match described was then played.

A smoking concert followed, and among those round the tables were:—Messrs. J. W. Graham, works manager; T. Neave, superintendent engineer; J. Martin, chief engine draughtsman; W. Davison, superintendent shipwright; Davis, chief engineer, Empress of Asia; R. Rutter, H.T. Richardson, J. Crawford, S. Gray, C. Crispin, Wilson-Brown, W. Taylor, J. Colin Owen, J. Smith, Ormered and Morris, Empress of Asia; and many officers of the Empress of Asia.

The President during the evening presented the opening players with delightfully neat gold medals inscribed as souvenirs of the occasion.

Mr. Rutter said he thanked them most heartily for the gifts, which he had given to Mr. Richardson and himself. He was very much obliged to Mr. Richardson for the game and he was very grateful for the entertainment he had received that night. He hoped they would meet on many more occasions like that in the near future (Applause).

Mr. Richardson said it was with diffidence that he rose to address them as he had received a shock. He had been playing billiards since he was fourteen years of age and he had just received a gold medal for it (loud laughter), and he had not deserved that (laughter).

The President announced that Mr. Graham had intimated his willingness to give a prize for the first billiard competition on the new table (Applause). He thanked their works manager on behalf of the Club.

Mr. Graham responding to the vote of thanks said that he was convinced that taking one thing with another, the men at the docks had a warm spot in their hearts for him (Applause). They all strove after the unity that was necessary to keep the old company going (Cheers).

The defendant is convicted on the second charge, that of Common Law Misdemeanour and is fined $100.

PALMISTRY CASE.

Further Evidence to Corroborate Charge.

This morning in the Police Court, before Mr. F. A. Hazeland two Indians, Gawa Singh and Nanh Singh of the Sikh Temple, Wanohai, were charged with unlawfully pretending to tell fortunes, or with subtle craft and palmistry endeavouring to impose on John J. Lyne, one of His Majesty's subjects.

Messrs. Lee D'Almada & Co. and J. H. Gardiner appeared for the defendants.

Mr. Gardiner said he had seen the Hon. Mr. M. I. Messer and he was willing that the case should be withdrawn.

Complainant, who, however, wished the case to go on, continued his evidence from the hearing on Thursday. He had to send out for the whisky and soap. The first defendant again asked to see his hands and looking at them said: "You had better go upstairs and wash them and dry them well."

Defendant said: "Your hands are clean but close them. In fortune telling there is good and there is bad fortune and if I tell you bad you must not be angry. What figures you see in your left hand is your bad fortune or liabilities and what you have got in your right hand is your good fortune."

He told complainant to open his left hand. There was nothing on it, but on the right there was $25,000. The figures were in black as though they had been printed there. All the while the second defendant was fanning him.

The hearing was adjourned.

ALLEGED MURDER.

Man Found Dead in a Cookhouse.

There was sent to the public mortuary yesterday the dead body of a man named Yu Wing, eighteen years of age, who was formerly living at No. 8, Moon Street, who is alleged to have been murdered in the cook house at about 3 p.m. yesterday. According to police enquiries the deceased was employed by several Chinese employees of the Naval Dockyard who had rented the second floor. After the Dockyard employees had had their mid-day meal they left the deceased alone in the house.

At about 3 o'clock a school boy returned from school and found the deceased lying dead in the cook house. He was bound hand and foot and had apparently been strangled. Robbery appeared to be the motive, for several boxes were broken open and clothing and money to the total value of $20 was stolen.

TRAINING NOTES.

Nasty Wet Morning at the Course.

Despite the fact that the morning was a cold and wet one, there was almost a gymkhana crowd present to witness the work of the ponies at the race course this morning. Mr. Vida, Mr. Heard and Mr. Gegg were to be seen in the saddle. The morning was not one on which crack times could be expected and we look hopefully for brighter weather next week when the final gallops will take place. Both courses were in use and on occasions as many as eight ponies were galloping at one time. The times recorded were:

COMPANY MEETING.

The Union Waterboat Company, Limited.

The ninth annual general meeting of the shareholders of the Union Waterboat Company, Limited, was held in the offices of Messrs. Dudwell and Co. Ltd., to-day at noon, for the purpose of receiving the report of the General Managers together with a statement of accounts to December 31, 1913. Mr. S. H. Dodwell presided, and others present were: Messrs. J. W. O. Bonnar, O. A. Tomes, J. Jonckheer and A. H. Skelton, consulting Committee; A. E. Crapnell, G. R. Edwards; T. G. Weall, H. H. Bond, A. Ritchie and S. R. Carhill, secretary.

The Secretary read the notice convening the meeting.

The Chairman said:—Gentlemen, With your permission I will dispense with the formality of reading the report and accounts.

The profits for the year under review amount to $64,744.03 as against $53,877.48 for the previous year, which shows a healthy progress, and with which I trust you will be satisfied.

Your property has been well kept up during the year out of current revenue, and in spite of the two typhoons I am glad to say we have not had to fall back on either the Special Repair or Insurance funds.

Last year I alluded to the possibility of selling two of your oldest wooden boats, but I regret to say the negotiations were unsuccessful. In explanation of the sum we recommended being set aside for Depreciation, I would remind you that five of the boats, those taken over from the Hongkong Steam Water-boat Company, are considerably older than the rest. Three of these still in fairly good order but two of them we cannot expect to last very much longer, and it will probably be necessary to replace at least one of them in the near future.

With regard to your investments, although perhaps hardly necessary, I feel sure you will approve of our adopting the usual course and writing them down to their market value on 31st December.

Beyond those few remarks, gentlemen, I think the report and Accounts call for no further comment, but before proposing their adoption, I shall be pleased to answer to the best of my ability any questions you may desire to ask. There being no questions, gentlemen, I beg to propose the adoption of the report and accounts as circulated.

Mr. Crapnell:—I beg to second that, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman—proposed by Mr. Crapnell, that the report and accounts be adopted as circulated. I put that to the meeting. Those in favour. Against. Carried unanimously.

The Chairman:—The only other business, gentlemen, is the election of auditor.

Mr. Weall:—I propose the re-election of Mr. A. O. D. Gourdin at the same remuneration, $100 per annum, as auditor for the ensuing year.

Mr. Bond:—I beg to second that.

The Chairman:—Proposed by Mr. Weall, seconded by Mr. Bond, that Mr. A. O. D. Gourdin be re-elected auditor for the ensuing year at the remuneration of $100. Three in favour. Against. Carried.

That is all the business, gentlemen, thanking you for your attendance. Dividend warrants are now ready.

The meeting then terminated.

1-06.1-5, 1-44, 2-22, 1-30.
 Langrana galloped with above.
 Monarch Dablia, —, 1-10, 1-41, 1-31.

Mexican Chief, 33, 1-08.1-5, 1-43 3-5, 2-17.4-5, 1-34.1.

British Councillor at Peking. It is reported, says the Peking Gazette, that Mr. Bailey Alston's place as Councillor at the British Legation will be taken by Mr. James William Ronald Mac-Leay, who for the last three years has been First Secretary at Brussels, and previously to that was in Brazil.

TO MATCH HIS IMPORTANCE.

One day, while Labouchere was attached to the Embassy at St. Petersburg, a fussy German nobleman pushed his way into the room where the young Englishman was working and asked to see the Ambassador at once.

"Please take a chair," said Labouchere: "he will be here soon."

The German had expected to be received with a little more formality, and he began to bluster.

"Young man, do you know who I am?" And he poured out a string of imposing titles. Labouchere looked up from his work and listened with an expression of respectful awe on his face.

"Pray, sir, take two chairs!" he remarked quietly at the end of the recital, and then went on writing.

LOG BOOK.

Dock Contracts for Germany.

The Port of London Authority announce that contracts for three pairs of lock gates, a bascule bridge, a swing bridge, and a caisson for the dry dock, in connection with the Royal Albert Dock Extension (South), have been placed with two German firms. For the lock gates the order has been placed with the Butchfinninghutte Aktienverein fur Bergbau und Huttenbetrieb, who are at present constructing two pairs of lock gates and a swing bridge for the East India Dock improvement works. The contracts for the bascule bridge, swing bridge, and caisson have been given to the Maschinenfabrik-Augsburg-Nurnburg. It is officially stated that these contracts were obtained in competition with British firms, and show a saving of nearly 26 per cent. on the lowest British tenders of £179,071.

Accident on s.s. Japan.

The Peking Gazette reports that a rather serious accident occurred on board the Apoar liner Japan in Penang harbour on the 20th ult. About 9 o'clock the bulkhead was opened in order for cargo to be taken out and the door swung back striking a coolie passenger who, unobserving it, was standing near. The man was rendered unconscious, and medical examination showed that he had received a bad wound, three inches long, just above the eye. After receiving attention from the ship's doctor he was removed to the hospital. His condition is serious.

The Great Soerabaya Dock.

The 14,000 ton dry dock of which so much has been heard, and which is a striking indication of the progress that is being made in the Dutch East Indies, has arrived safely at Soerabaya. It is understood that the precise methods in which it is to be employed have not yet been decided upon. For some considerable time, negotiations have been on foot with the Soerabaya Dry Dock Co. of which the ex-Chief Inspector of Shipping in the Indies, M. A. G. Zeeman, is director. Up to the present, however, no result has been achieved. Meanwhile the monster dock is moored in the torpedo boat harbour and the company has a smaller dock of 3,200 tons in use. It is considered not at all unlikely that the larger structure will be employed by the naval establishment.

Hamburg's Shipping.

During 1913 there arrived at Hamburg 15,073 (1912, 15,774) sea-going vessels of 14,185,000 (1912, 13,568,000) registered tons net. From East India there arrived 243 (271) steamers of 724,000 (807,000) registered tons from China, Japan, and East Siberia 76 (1912,
